- Multnomah County is working with local hotels to establish emergency shelters for people living in group housing who become sick with respiratory illness. These locations are designed to provide shelter while helping isolate sick individuals.
- Multnomah County is coordinating with health care providers, the state, and others to determine how to build capacity for supporting those who have a positive test for COVID-19 but do not need hospitalization, who would otherwise be living in group housing.
- In order to create social distancing in current homeless shelter systems, two spaces have been opened as social distancing shelters, and a third has a planned opening this Friday. These locations do not add additional beds to the shelter system. However, they do help our shelter system to space people out more in the current environment and better meet the guidance on spacing provided by health officials. These shelters will be accessed through an intake process only, not through walk-ups or drop-offs.
